[Abstract] David Lyle Jeffrey, the author of People of the book, reinstated the authority of the biblical text in response to postmodernism's revolt against text theory. By a thorough reading and serious reflection of the book, the researchers of this paper seek to understand how the author achieved this feat at a time when postmodernism and deconstruction still carry the day. However, the paper notes that after the reconstruction of the biblical text, David Lyle Jeffrey does not provide a clear path toward meaning. In this regard David Lyle Jeffrey and Derrida, who was refuted by him as a deconstructionist, have something in common.
